PERSONAL SKILLS

Strong writing skills:

I am able to convey my ideas articulately and clearly through my writing. I have had the chance, throughout my academic career, to write academic papers, articles, and press releases which gave me the knowledge to communicate my research coherently and in a well-structured manner.

Research skills and critical thinking:

I am used to gathering and analysing a huge amount of information from different sources efficiently and with a definite goal in mind. I am capable of employing different methodologies, IR theories, and approaches to establish a good research framework in which collocate my works of analysis.

Good verbal communication skills:

As a result of presentations, interviews, debates, and a front office job at the university's library I have developed a certain confidence in public speeches.

Flexibility and problem-solving skills:

I adapt easily to changes and I am able to overcome unforeseen obstacles without losing my focus. I have solid problem-solving skills which have helped me deal with these difficulties throughout my internships and work experiences.

Teamwork and time management:

I am used to working in teams and with strict deadlines, as a consequence of various research projects completed during my master's degree.

Leadership and work ethics:

I have coordinated groups, and projects and chaired debates during my master's degrees and outside of my lectures. I am capable of being persuasive and diplomatic while dealing with people in order to always complete the assigned tasks with efficient results.
